The Poster Child for Institutionalized Academic Cheating

Immediate Price Target of $25
Institutionalized Cheating is No Longer OK

The 2019 college admission scandal has shined a new light on academic integrity in the United States. What was long considered to be socially acceptable or even legal is now coming into question as media and lawmakers are questioning the status quo in our educational system.

Beyond Rick Singer and his manipulation of admissions, the conversation of institutionalized cheating cannot occur without first mentioning Chegg.

Chegg, a $4 bil company that has made a business off selling answers to homework and selling a service that allows students to submit plagiarized work as original is undermining the educational system and will soon be brought to the forefront of media attention.

In this report, Citron will explain how the “it’s never a problem until it’s a problem” moment has hit Chegg as now cheating does make a difference.
According to Dr. Donald McCabe and the International Center for Academic Integrity, surveys of over 70,000 high school students at over 24 high schools in the US revealed that 95% said they participated in some form of cheating, whether it was on a test, plagiarism or copying homework.

Chegg began as the Netflix for college textbooks but as the textbook market went online the company has pivoted into what has become the worst secret amongst high school and college campuses.

For lack of a better term, Chegg’s business model is now CaaS (i.e., Cheating as a Service).

It has become so obvious that even a USC professor referred to Chegg as “a thinly-veiled cheating service.”

Reddit boards are filled with students and teachers discussing the obvious use of Chegg as a means for cheating in homework and original essay writing.

If you don’t believe the reddit boards and don’t want to believe the words of a short seller then how about believing the words of their own partner.
Purdue University – Stating the Obvious

In February 2019, Chegg signed a partnership with Purdue University where Purdue’s Online Writing lab will help power the writing tools produced by Chegg in exchange for students having access to those Chegg tools.

Immediately after the partnership was announced, Professor of Economics Stephen Martin expressed the concerns of faculty by stating the following: “What’s problematic is Purdue University lending it’s good name and reputation to a company whose business plan apparently involves helping students cheat.”

Professor of Mathematics Ralph Kaufmann echoed this concern by stating that Chegg is a company with “two faces”… while Chegg claims to help students do their homework, students on Twitter are very clear that they use the site to do their homework for them.

The Purdue partnership brought criticism from other academics as well. Susan Schorn, writing program coordinator in the school of undergraduate studies at the University of Texas at Austin, stated: “I think it’s inevitable that Purdue OWL’s reputation will suffer from this association... I understand their desire to bring in a little cash, but I wish they had chosen a partner that didn’t come with the liabilities a platform like Chegg will inevitably have.”
Chegg Appears to be Operating Illegally

What we learned the past two weeks is that academic cheating is not only immoral but it’s also illegal.

Based on our analysis, it appears that Chegg is operating illegally in 17 states.

Distributing any post-secondary assignment for a profit with reasonable knowledge that it will be submitted by another person for academic credit is a CRIME in many US states.

Chegg believes they are exempt from this law because of their terms of service and their honor code. That is the equivalent of telling Waze you’re the passenger when getting directions.

As soon as politicians and media get over the Rick Singer scandal, Chegg should not be far behind.
The business of institutionalized cheating has become so bad that it has created a business to combat institutionalized cheating. Advance Publications this month bought Turnitin, which is a software developer that uses AI to scan students’ writing and code assignments to check for plagiarism. This is software used by university and high school teachers to specifically combat Chegg.

"[Turnitin] aims to be a 'conversation starter,' and it emphasizes the need... of 'a larger teaching moment around the importance of original writing, proper citation, and academic integrity.'” – National Post

Turnitin is enough to stunt Chegg’s growth and the Chegg user base acknowledges the danger of Turnitin.

Turnitin is based on academic integrity and Chegg has created forums to attempt to circumvent Turnitin, proving that Chegg is trying to help users continue institutionalized cheating.

Question: Is the answer in chegg will be shown in turnitin?

Expert Answer

Since the answers are not readily visible on the internet, turnitin won't be able to detect it.

You should be good to use answers from chegg.

Turnitin will most likely not find it.

Question: Does Turnitin detect written lessons?

Expert Answer

Yeah, anything that is present on the Internet can be detected by Turnitin. In order to escape from Turnitin, you need to modify the sentences, frame the sentence in your own words then there will be less chance of detecting plagiarised material.

Hope it helps, feel free to comment in case of any query.
Why is this CaaS Company Trading at a Peak Multiple??

Despite the forces of Turnitin, legal risks, and social risks associated with institutionalized cheating, Chegg is trading at a peak EV/Sales multiple of 11x and at a massive premium to best in class SaaS operator Salesforce, which only trades at 7x-8x.
Insider Selling

It appears as if insiders are acknowledging the risks and headwinds of the CaaS business model as insider selling is at a peak for all company insiders including the CEO who made his largest sale on record just a few days ago.
Short Interest At Lows

Short sellers have known about the dangers of Chegg but have been covering over the past 2 years as it seemed that no one was going to care about academic cheating but now things have changed.
10 years ago, Citron warned about future regulation in the for-profit education space, in a series of reports on Apollo Group when the stock was trading around $80. Subsequently, the government announced proposed regulatory changes regarding marketing and recruiting expenses. The company was eventually acquired for $10 per share.
What is Chegg Worth?

There is an obvious disclaimer in Chegg’s terms of service that make this company worth $0. Not to mention this company has serious risk of being sued by the Attorney General.

If Chegg has their “Swiss bank account moment” and has to disclose all their clients to their respective schools the business model falls apart and the stock goes to $0.

This is a risk stated in their “honor code”

“Furthermore, you should be aware that in the event your institution contacts Chegg as part of an investigation into academic integrity, Chegg is authorized under our Terms of Service and Privacy Policy to cooperate fully in that investigation and we commonly do. This can include providing information to your institution about your user profile, account, site usage activity, and interactions with Chegg Tutors.”

Best Case Scenario for Chegg Valuation- Ignoring Risk

We will take the leader in CaaS and put them in-line with the leader in SaaS. If we optimistically assume that Chegg deserves to trade in-line with Salesforce at an EV/Sales multiple of 7x, this implies a price target of $25.
